Sor Kaydak

The intricate lines snaking and criss-crossing over the landscape are roads in extreme southwestern Kazakhstan. The turquoise area to the left are salt flats and marshes, some parts of which are submerged (dark blue). The water body is Sor Kaydak, which was once a part of the Caspian Sea. As water levels have dropped, various patterns in the landscape emerged that reveal old tributaries.

LandSat 5 data acquired on 10/06/2006.